If you are lucky enough to have an old-fashioned stationer in the area, go and ask for a manual rubber press. If they have one, buy it, take it home and patiently print each one of the characters on paper. Let them dry, then scan them. Once they have been transformed into bitmaps, turn them into vectors, one by one, give them a name and transfer them all onto a font editor. Then edit the upper cases, the lower cases, the numbers, the special characters, fractions, etc.; give them widths and make kern couples. Do all of this, and you will feel just like Jaume Ros, the young graphic designer from Terrassa who has created Despatxada.

[citation needed] In situations where this superior official's signature may frequently be required for routine paperwork, a literal rubber stamp is used, with a likeness of their hand-written signature. In essence, the term is meant to
